ABOUT MAFTI

More than 1.5 million minor children in the United States have at least one parent serving a sentence for a criminal offense.

Montana received a grant in 2006 from the Family and Corrections Network (FCN) to undertake a project that supports the National Children's Bill of Rights for Children of the Incarcerated (see page 2).

The following public and private interests formed the Montana Alliance for Families Touched by Incarceration (MAFTI) and developed this manual to help children and families affected by incarceration navigate through this difficult time in their lives.

- Montana Head Start Association
- Montana Department of Corrections
- Court-Appointed Special Advocates (CASA of Montana)
- Montana Department of Health and Human Services

HOW TO USE THIS MANUAL

If you suddenly have become Mom or Dad to your grandchildren as one or both of their parents face criminal charges and possible prison, this manual is for you.

If you are a foster parent who is grasping for ways to help the youngster who cries at night because Mom went off to prison for 10 years, this manual is for you.

Maybe the police came to your house last week, arrested your spouse, and led him or her away in handcuffs as your toddler stood on the porch screaming, this manual is for you.

Suppose you operate a day care center and one day you receive a frantic call from a single dad whose kids spend their days with you. He has been jailed on a probation violation and could go back to prison. His kids need a place to stay just for a few nights until he can figure things out. This manual is for you.

If any of these scenarios sound familiar, then you are among a unique group of caregivers for children whose parents or other family members have been thrust into the criminal justice system for a few days, a year, a decade – or maybe more. These are children in acute crisis who need immediate answers just when it seems the situation is hopeless.

There are no one-size-fits-all answers for the difficult questions a child will ask. Every family and every circumstance is unique. Read our questions and suggested answers, see the similarities in what you are hearing from the children in your care, and you will certainly come up with an answer that is right.

We have divided this manual into chapters, each representing a stage in the criminal justice system from the time of arrest through the court process, conviction, sentencing, and on to prison or a community corrections placement such as drug treatment or a prerelease center.

The universal questions on page 6 are ones a child probably will ask more than once as the family member progresses through the criminal justice system. Is the family member safe? When will he or she come home? Does he or she love me?

This manual was written and reviewed by dozens of caring Montanans, including a mother of four whose husband spent time in prison, elementary teachers, Head Start staff, probation officers, male and female inmates, and many others.

We have included as many phone numbers as possible for federal, tribal and state government facilities and programs.

The Internet Resources list points you to a wealth of free information. We realize not everyone has access to the internet. Perhaps you do not have a home computer. Try your local library, visit an internet cafe in your community, or ask a friend to print some of this information for you.

10 TIPS FOR CAREGIVERS... FROM CAREGIVERS

By Ann Adalist-Estrin, Children of Prisoners Library, Family and Connections Network Copyright 2003.

1. Talk about feelings with children. "You look sad. Are you missing Daddy?" Or, "When you get that angry at little things I wonder if you are also angry at your Mom for going to jail?" or, "I wish your dad could have seen you play ball tonight and I bet you do too."

2. Be as honest with children as possible. "Mom won't be coming home for a very long time. It will be four more birth-days (or two more summer vacations)."

3. Remember to keep your feelings separate from each child's. "We feel different things about this, I am angry at your dad and don't really want to see him but I want you to go because he's your Dad and you love him."

4. Set up family discussion times. Tuesday night is the family "meeting." Or Wednesday night is "Let's wait for dad's call tonight and talk about how we are all doing with this." Or Saturday morning's breakfast is a "prison and jail talk is off limits" time—a moment of relief to those who need a break from the subject.

5. Talk about the family's choice to tell others or keep it a secret from certain people.

6. Let children know why the choice is necessary. Provide plenty of opportunity to talk about it at home.

7. Encourage children to write or talk to their parents whenever possible.

8. Help children to start a picture or story that their parent and child mail back and forth, adding something each time.

9. Read with your children. Encourage your local library to include books and pamphlets about children of prisoner.

10. Get support and help for the children and yourself... through friends, clergy, or counselors.

10 (OR MORE) QUESTIONS A CHILD MIGHT ASK AT EVERY STAGE IN THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE PROCESS

INTRODUCTION

We have included here a few of the common questions a child will ask when the parent is in jail, prison, or a community corrections placement such as a drug/alcohol treatment program or prerelease center. Our answers are suggestions. You can tailor them to fit your unique circumstances.

1. Where is my family member?

Adults often sugarcoat information about family members who have committed crimes because they want to protect children from the painful truth. Lying to a child seldom is a good idea. The truth has a way of coming out. A lie revealed by someone outside the home may cause the child to doubt the caregiver whom (s)he desperately needs to trust.

Telling a child that the family member works in another city, state, or country, is away at college, overseas in the military, or in the hospital will increase their anxiety. Why doesn't (s)he ever come to see me? Will (s)he die? Is (s)he already dead? The child will notice that other children whose parents are away get to see them once in awhile. Without accurate information, a child might believe matters are even worse than they are.

2. Why is (s)he there?

“Your family member is there because (s)he committed a crime and has consequences.”

3. When will (s)he be coming home?

Release dates are seldom certain. It's probably best not to give the child a firm date on which a loved one will come home. There are too many variables. For example, a family member who is eligible for a parole hearing might tell the caregiver that (s)he is getting out of prison soon, but the parole board might not grant parole.

“We don't know for sure but we do know that (s)he will not be home this Christmas.”

This is appropriate in cases where the family member received a prison sentence with a parole eligibility restriction:

“(S)he will not be coming home until you are all grown up, but you can visit.”

“The judge will decide today if your family member can come home.”

4. When can I see my family member?

In most cases, family members can visit offenders in jail, prison or other correctional facilities. The Department of Corrections (DOC) supports the connection between children and their parents if contact is safe and appropriate for the children. The best answer is one that gives children a specific time to look forward to, but only if you are sure of the time for a visit.

Be aware that circumstances change rapidly in correctional facilities, and your plans will need to change too. For example, prisons sometimes “lock down” on short notice to ensure the safety of inmates, staff and visitors. During these times, no one can enter or leave the facility. If an inmate breaks a supervision rule, visiting privileges may be withheld.

“The jailer said we could come tomorrow. We will visit right after you get home from school.”

“Every prison has different rules about visiting. I will call Monday and find out the rules.”

“The prison is a long way from here. We won’t be able to visit until spring break.”

“ We will have a car in May. We can go then.”

“You can’t visit right now, but (s)he might write to you. Would you like to write a letter or draw a picture for your family member?”

5. Can I touch my family member?

If the family member committed a crime against any child, (s)he may have restricted contact. Most often, however, parents and children may have limited physical contact during visits in jail, prison, and other correctional facilities.

“You can sit on her lap and she will read you a story.”

“She will hug and kiss you like always.”

“He will be behind glass so you will not be able to touch him.

You can talk to him on a telephone at the prison.”

6. What will happen to me?

“We don’t know yet where you will stay while your family member is in jail/prison. We will make sure you are safe.”

“You will stay with me until he/she comes home.”

“Your grandparents will take care of you and your brothers until your family member comes home.”

If a child must be separated from siblings, tell him/her that they will be with adults who will try to keep them safe too. Some siblings separated during a parent’s incarceration are never reunited.

Perhaps a caregiver is able to care for an infant but not school-age children. Avoid dates for a reunion (tomorrow, Saturday, etc.) unless you are sure.

7. Is my family member okay?

A child who watches TV might have a view of jail, court, and prison as dangerous, noisy places where people are sometimes hurt or even killed. They will experience fear, anxiety, sadness, and perhaps guilt or shame about their loved one behind bars. Usually these stereotypes about the criminal justice system are not true, but injury or death of a family member is possible.

“Your family member has food and water, a warm place to sleep, and comfortable clothes. The people who work in the jail/prison/treatment center work hard to make sure that everyone is safe.”

8. What will (s)he do there?

“Your family member will have rules to follow. (S)he might go to school to learn how to obey laws, be less angry, stop using alcohol or illegal drugs, and be a better parent. (S)he will eat, sleep, exercise, and talk with other people.”

9. Does (s)he blame me? Is it my fault?

“It is not your fault that your family member committed a crime. (S)he is paying the consequences now.”

In domestic violence situations, the child might have called the police, or been the reason an adult called the police.

“You did the right thing by calling the police because your family member might have hurt you or someone else.”

10. Does (s)he still love me?

Most parents love their children regardless of their current circumstances. However, some parents may not feel love for anyone due to alcohol/drug abuse, extreme anger and resentment about being arrested, or mental illness.

“Your family member will always love you. (S)he might be angry right now, but (s)he still loves you.”

If you do not believe this is honest in your situation, your answer will need to be more creative.

“Sometimes people who commit crimes are very mixed up and they don’t know how they feel about anyone.”

11. Is it okay if I feel confused, scared, sad, or angry?

“All feelings are okay. Sometimes it helps to talk to other people like a friend or trusted adult about your feelings.”

12. Is it okay if I still love my family member?

Children who have undergone the worst physical, sexual, or emotional abuse imaginable often still love the family member. Resist the temptation to tell the child that the family member is a bad person who does not deserve love. This can create more confusion and trauma.

“Yes, it is okay that you love your family member.”

13. Is it okay if I don’t love my family member anymore?

“Yes it is, and it is also okay for you to have different feelings about this later.”

14. What can I do to help my family member?

“Everyone in the family needs to love and support each other by helping with chores at home and trying hard to be a good brother or sister.”

10 QUESTIONS A CHILD MIGHT ASK WHEN A FAMILY MEMBER IS ARRESTED

INTRODUCTION

The arrest of a family member is an immediate crisis like a house fire, car accident, serious illness, or death in the family. Children will probably react to the immediate event with fear, panic, and shock.

This situation will be worse if police arrive with their guns drawn and handcuff the family member. Adults also will be in crisis and possibly unavailable as support for the children. Depending on family dynamics, the children might be overlooked entirely.

The arrest of one or both parents robs children of their sense of security. Police or social workers may take them from the home and place them in foster care. If the parents produced methamphetamines in the home, the children may be stripped, bathed, dressed in unfamiliar clothes, and assessed by medical experts who are strangers to them.

Children need physical safety, reassurance, information, an introduction to new routines, support, kindness, and adult encouragement to ask questions. Caregivers must not expect children to hold the family together or postpone their grief.

If the children or other family members are victims (domestic abuse or incest, for example), the children probably will have mixed emotions. They might feel relief that the assaults will stop. They might feel guilty for reporting the crime or for not being able to stop the assaults. The family member might blame them for the arrest. They may be confused and sad. Children often love their abusive parents. Depending on what they have learned at home, children might see police as the bad guys.

1. What happened?

“Someone thinks your family member broke an important rule (or law).”

“Your family member was arrested. That means the police took him to jail so they can talk about this more and figure out what really happened.”

2. Why did the police tie my family member up?

“When people are arrested, they might become angry and frightened. Sometimes they try to run away or hurt someone. The police put on handcuffs to make sure that your family member does not run away or hurt anyone. They will take off the handcuffs when they get to jail.”

3. What did my family member do?

Explaining any crime to a child can be difficult. Keep it simple for now. Provide no more information than the child can understand. The truth will come later.

“They think (s)he stole something.”

“They think (s)he broke a window and went into someone else’s house without asking.”

If the family member is accused of murder, assault, or rape, simplify it for the time being. If (s)he goes to trial or is convicted, you can provide the child with more details.

“They think (s)he hurt someone else.”

If the arrest involves manufacture and/or sale of dangerous drugs, the child could have been in imminent danger.

“Your parents are not able to keep you safe right now, so you are going to stay with me for awhile.”

4. Will I ever see my family member again?

This is another tough question. Although the child will probably be reunited with the arrested family member, this is an uncertain and dangerous time for everyone.

“You will see your family member again, but it might not be very soon. We will have to wait and see.”

5. Is my family member safe?

If the family member left home in handcuffs, the child may be very anxious about safety. Also, they might have seen violence on TV associated with arrest and jail.

“The people who are in charge of the jail try very hard to keep everyone safe.”

If you know that the child trusts the police, explain that police officers run the jail. Otherwise, try telling the child that people who run the jail have been to school to learn how to keep people safe.

6. What will happen to my family member in jail?

“When your family member gets to jail, the police will ask lots of questions, and maybe take a picture. Your family member will stay in a small room with bars, called a cell. (S)he might share a cell with at least one other person. People in jail each have a small bed called a cot, with blankets and a pillow. Everyone in jail dresses the same in uniforms that look like pajamas or the clothes painters wear. They have three meals a day.”

7. When will (s)he come home from jail?

Immediately after arrest, no one knows when the family member will be released. It is best not to guess or make promises. People who are arrested seldom come home until they have been to court.

“We don’t know yet. Your family member will talk to a judge. The judge listens to everyone and then decides if your family member can come home soon or if (s)he has to stay in jail for awhile.”

You can add information if law enforcement or the court provides it. Release dates typically are uncertain.

“We know that (s)he will not be able to come home tonight or tomorrow night.”

8. Is it my fault my family member was arrested?

Especially if the arrest followed violence at home, children might think it is their fault. What they really want to know is whether anyone blames them for the arrest.

“It is not your fault. The police arrested your family member because they have broken an important rule called a law. Arrest can be a consequence for adults who don’t follow laws.”

9. What if I do something wrong? Will I go to jail too?

“If you do something wrong you might have a consequence like a time-out or not riding your bike for three days.”

“When you get older you could go to jail if you commit a crime.”

10 QUESTIONS A CHILD MIGHT ASK WHEN A FAMILY MEMBER GOES TO COURT

INTRODUCTION

After arrest, the family member (now called a suspect) will go to court more than once and possibly many times. The court process will be a time of great uncertainty for children and the entire family.

No one knows how long the court process will take or what will happen next. It could be weeks, months, or even years before the family member is convicted or set free. The family member might not come home at all during this time.

At the first court hearing, the judge will appoint a lawyer for your family member and may set a bond amount (sometimes called bail). If (s)he pays the bond, (s)he can go home between court hearings. Most suspects plead not guilty at first even if they committed the crime.

The family member might admit to the crime later or plead guilty to lesser charges in exchange for a lighter sentence (plea bargain). If your family member does not plead guilty, (s)he will have a trial.

Caregivers must use caution when deciding whether to take young children to court. Evidence against the family member can be traumatic and possibly harmful for children to hear. They love the family member and yet people might say accusatory things. Consider the child's age, developmental level, and temperament. The suspect may not be allowed to have physical contact with the child in court.

If the crime was committed against the child, (s)he will have different emotions. Even if the child is a victim, (s)he probably loves the family member and might feel responsible for the arrest.

Children may have seen court events on TV in which the judge shouts at the accused person. They need reassurance that the judge and police will stop abuse and violence.

1. What is court?

“Court is where a judge listens to your family member and other people. The judge tries to find out what happened, and make a fair decision about what will happen next.”

If the judge does not grant bond, or the family member cannot afford the bond, the child will have more questions.

2. Could my family member come home if we had more money?

“The judge thinks it would be best right now for your family member to stay in jail until people figure out what happened.”

Unfortunately, it's true that some people cannot afford bail/bond while others can. Children must know that they are not responsible. Otherwise, they might feel guilty about needing the basics such as food and clothing.

If the family member bonds out of jail:

3. Are they letting my family member pay money to come home?

“They are letting your family member come home for awhile because (s)he promised to go back and see the judge later. (S)he will get the money back later when (s)he keeps the promise. If your family member breaks the promise, (s)he will lose the money and might go back to jail.”

Some children will be curious and want to go to court, while others will be terrified at the thought. Court is difficult for most adults, and they may not be emotionally available to the child. Court generally is not a good place for young children. They have probably seen court portrayed on TV as abusive and violent, with people shouting at each other. Assure the child the family member will be safe.

4. Can I go to court too?

“You will not be going to court. Court is for adults. People will be talking about the crime they think your family member committed. You will stay home with (caregiver). The judge will find out the truth.”

“You would have to sit still and be quiet for a long time. We will stay home. Maybe we can read a book.”

If the child is the victim of the family member’s crime or a witness to the crime, (s)he might have to testify. In these cases, lawyers will meet with the child in advance to explain things and attempt to create a comfortable environment. Let the child see the courtroom before the trial. Role-play so the child knows exactly what to expect when (s)he goes to court but be careful not to tell him/her what to say. This is called “coaching” and is not allowed in court.

5. Why do I have to go to court? I’m scared.

“The judge wants to ask you some questions about what happened. I will be right there with you. Just tell the truth. It’s okay if you don’t remember everything. The judge will make sure that you are safe. (S)he will not hurt or yell at you.”

If the caregiver is a parent, grandparent, or other family member, (s)he might have to go to court as a witness. Children may fear that this other loved adult will disappear.

6. Will they make you (the caregiver) stay in jail too?

“No. I am going to court because the judge asked me to tell what I know about your family member and the crime people say (s)he did. I will not have to stay long or go to jail. I will be home in time to read you a story tonight.”

If the child goes to court, (s)he will have questions about everything.

7. Why do people have guns? Will they kill us?

“They wear guns and badges because they are police officers

(or sheriff deputies). They will not kill anyone. Their job is to make sure people are safe in court.”

8. Why are people saying these bad things about my family member?

“Some people are saying those things because they believe your family member committed a crime. That does not mean it’s true. We don’t know yet.”

Most suspects enter into a plea bargain. This means the family member agrees to plead guilty if the prosecutor will drop some of the charges or reduce them to something less serious. For example, (s)he might plead guilty to possession of drugs if the prosecutor will drop the charges of manufacturing drugs. In exchange for the guilty plea, the family member can expect a lighter sentence.

The alternative to a plea bargain is a trial at which the prosecutor must prove to a jury that the suspect committed the crime.

Even if a judge or jury does not convict the family member, life may not return to normal. Some members of the community will assume the criminal charges were true even if the prosecution did not prove them. Arrest and court events make headlines. The family member may lose his/her job. Neighbors and co-workers may eye the family with suspicion.

If the family member victimized his/her spouse and children, a not-guilty verdict may be traumatic.

10 QUESTIONS A CHILD MIGHT ASK WHEN A FAMILY MEMBER IS CONVICTED

INTRODUCTION

Conviction means the family member was found guilty of a crime. Perhaps (s)he admitted to the crime as charged, or to lesser charges through a plea bargain. Perhaps the case went to trial and a jury found the family member guilty.

Conviction is another time of crisis for the family as they face the probability that a loved and trusted adult did such a thing. People sometimes are wrongfully convicted, but denial becomes more difficult. The convicted person might appeal the conviction, which extends the uncertainty.

Regardless of the circumstances, the child's life will be changed forever by a conviction. If another family member is the victim, the child might feel relief about the conviction, but (s)he may also feel sadness, betrayal, confusion, guilt and shame. (S)he will probably miss this family member regardless of how bad things were.

1. My family member said (s)he didn't do it, so did (s)he tell a lie?

"Sometimes people are afraid to tell the truth so they lie. They know that telling the truth about a crime means they will have consequences. Maybe they know the truth will hurt their loved ones. Sometimes people commit crimes and we cannot always understand why."

2. Does it mean (s)he lied about other things?

“Lying about this crime does not necessarily mean your family member lied about other things.”

3. Is it my fault (s)he is not coming home?

“It is not your fault/our fault that your family member hurt you/us. It was his/her fault and (s)he has to have consequences.”

4. Why can't my family member tell the judge that (s)he is sorry and then come home?

“When people make small mistakes, like a child sneaks a cookie, (s)he can apologize and that's the end of it. When an adult breaks a law, they have bigger consequences. This was a very serious crime because it hurt other people.”

“The burglary victims are afraid to leave the house now.”

“The person who was shot died and can never go home to his/her children. The children don't have a mother/father now.”

5. My family member said someone else helped him commit the crime. What happened to them?

“The other person also will have consequences.”

“The judge decided that the other people did not do this.”

6. Will my family member do this again?

“We don't know. Your family member will have to decide if (s)he will obey the laws from now on. People will help him understand why what (s)he did was wrong. They will help him stop drinking/using drugs so maybe (s)he won't commit more crimes.”

“We will work hard to keep you safe so your family member cannot hurt you again.”

7. Where are the people (s)he hurt?

“People who are hurt when someone breaks the law are called crime victims. The victims are going to be okay.”

“The victim died and her family is very sad.”

“The people who lived in the house that was burglarized are okay and your family member is going to pay them for the things (s)he stole.”

8. Will the victims hurt us?

“The victims are angry at your family member, but not at you.”

“We will keep you safe. They will not hurt you.”

9. What will happen next?

Judges in Montana have several sentencing options. Avoid predicting what will occur, even if the defense attorney has asked for a light sentence. A surprise at sentencing could cause the child to mistrust adults later. Never to tell a child that the family member will come home soon.

“Your family member will have to stay in jail until the judge decides the consequences. Consequences are called a sentence. We don’t know yet what the judge will decide.”

10. Can I tell the judge we need my family member back?

“Most judges understand that children need their parents. However, one of the consequences for breaking a law is that your family member will have to be away from you. It is sad but true that you have to suffer because your family member committed a crime.”

10 QUESTIONS A CHILD MIGHT ASK WHEN A FAMILY MEMBER IS SENTENCED

INTRODUCTION

Montana judges have many sentencing choices. Prison is usually reserved for repeat offenders or those who have committed murder, aggravated assault, rape, or manufacture and sale of dangerous drugs. Fewer than 20 percent of offenders convicted of a felony crime in Montana receive a prison-only sentence.

About one fourth of sentences in Montana include both prison and suspended time. After release from prison, the offender serves the suspended portion on probation. This allows offenders to return to the community with supervision. As probationers, the offenders must meet court-ordered conditions and report regularly to a probation officer.

Most crimes in Montana involve alcohol or drugs, so judges usually require offenders to remain “clean and sober” on probation. They also must avoid bars and casinos. Mandatory counseling and addictions treatment are designed to meet individual needs. Probationers must find jobs and pay any court-ordered fines, child support, and victim restitution.

Almost half of all first-time nonviolent offenders who plead guilty receive deferred sentences. This means the judge postpones (defers) sentencing for a period of time and the offender agrees to obey probationary conditions. If the offender completes the deferred sentence without violations, the crime does not remain on the record. If the offender breaks probationary rules, the judge usually orders an arrest and hearing.

Montana has a unique sentence called a Department of Corrections commitment, often referred to as a “DOC commit.” The judge allows the DOC to decide the best placement for the offender based on individual risks and needs. Only about one fifth of DOC commits go to prison initially. DOC places most offenders in prerelease centers, drug or alcohol treatment centers, or in the intensive supervision program (ISP). ISP offenders live in the community, report to a probation officer, and wear electronic monitoring devices that track their location.

1. What is a sentence?

“A sentence is the consequence your family member will have for committing a crime. A sentence includes punishment such as jail or prison. Your family member might have to pay some money too.”

2. Who decides what happens to my family member?

“The judge and lawyers will listen to a lot of people like the police, lawyers, your family member, and the people who were hurt – the victims – before the judge decides the sentence. The judge will probably order your family member to receive help for problems (drinking, drugs, anger, and so forth) and attend a special school to learn how to obey the law. ”

3. Can I tell the judge that I want my family member to come home?”

“Sentencing decisions are made by adults. One of the consequences for committing a crime is that you and your family member might not get to live together for a while/a long time. You may miss your family member. It is sad that you have a consequence because you didn't do anything wrong."

Note: The caregiver might help the child write a letter to the judge or draw a picture as a way to express feelings. Avoid giving the child hope that this will make a difference because it probably will not. Explain to the child that it might feel good to express his/her feelings.

4. My family member said (s)he wouldn't do it again, so why can't (s)he come home?

"When an adult commits a crime, the consequences are much bigger than when a child breaks a rule at home. Your family member needs help learning how to follow the law."

5. Why did my family member get to come home the last time but not this time? (In instances of a deferred or suspended sentence)

"Last time the judge gave your family member another chance to follow the law. (S)he committed another crime. Now (s)he has more consequences and needs more help."

6. My family member said (s)he would be coming home soon.

"Sometimes adults don't tell a child something bad is going to happen because they don't want the child to be afraid or sad. It's too bad your family member promised (s)he would come home soon. The judge is the one who decides."

7. Why doesn't the judge like my family member?

"The judge must decide what is best for your family member. Sometimes consequences are the best thing for people who commit crimes. This helps them learn to behave themselves. Sometimes people need to be punished for hurting others. This does not mean the judge doesn't like your family member."

8. Other people do the same thing. Why don't they get sentenced?

"Adults do not always get caught for committing a crime just like children do not always get caught when they steal cookies. It is never okay to do something wrong, even if you don't get caught. Most people who commit crimes will get caught."

9. Will my family member be killed?

(A death sentence is so rare in Montana that we won't address it in this manual. See the resources list.)

"No. Being killed is not a consequence for committing a crime. Your family member will have consequences that (s)he will not like, but (s)he will not be killed."

If the child is the victim, (s)he will have different questions.

It might not be possible to guarantee the safety of anyone in the family once a family member has committed a violent or sexual crime.

10. Will (s)he hurt me again?

"The judge will make rules for your family member to follow. The rules are meant to keep you and others in your family safe. This might mean that your family member will not live at home (for awhile, for two years, or ever again)."

"Your family member will be required to learn how to control his anger. When he hurt you, he was on drugs and now he does not use drugs anymore. The judge will not let him come home unless (s)he is certain that you will be safe."

"We will do all we can to keep you safe."

10 QUESTIONS A CHILD MIGHT ASK WHEN A FAMILY MEMBER GOES TO PRISON

INTRODUCTION

In most cases, a prison sentence will be another immediate family crisis, the worst-case scenario. Until now, adults and children in the family could hope for a better outcome such as a suspended sentence, deferred imposition of sentence, or a prison alternative. Now it is certain that the family member won't be coming home any time soon.

If the family member committed crimes against children or other adults in the family, a prison sentence guarantees a respite from the hurt, perhaps permanently, and so might be a relief.

Prisons and jails are similar in appearance but they have different purposes. Jails are temporary holding facilities operated by cities, counties and tribal governments. Suspects go to jail after arrest and before a court hearing or trial if they are not granted bond (or bail). Incarcerated people are called inmates.

Offenders convicted of misdemeanors in Montana also serve their sentences in local jails, often in the community in which they committed their crimes. Offenders sometimes remain in county jails for months after sentencing due to additional court hearings, or prison overcrowding.

Prisons in Montana are larger secure facilities designed for felony offenders serving longer sentences. Prisons have more treatment, education and exercise options than jails.

The Montana Department of Corrections (DOC) operates all prisons that house adult offenders who were convicted in state district courts.

DOC's administrative offices are in Helena.

MONTANA WOMEN'S PRISON (MWP) in Billings is Montana's only prison for adult female offenders. MWP offers a range of treatment and education opportunities that focus on rehabilitation, chemical dependency treatment and education, including parenting.

MONTANA STATE PRISON (MSP) in Deer Lodge is the main prison for men and offers the most treatment and reentry options, including Montana Correctional Enterprises or "prison industries," which prepare inmates for employment once they are released.

MSP administers three smaller prisons for male offenders. Corrections Corporation of America (CCA) owns CROSSROADS CORRECTIONAL CENTER in Shelby, which contracts with DOC. CCC houses male federal inmates who are awaiting court action or transfer to an out-of-state prison. All women convicted of federal crimes are incarcerated out of state. DAWSON COUNTY CORRECTIONAL FACILITY in Glendive and CASCADE COUNTY REGIONAL PRISON in Great Falls operate through a DOC-county partnership. State and county inmates are separated.

Several offender treatment programs operate in privately owned facilities that essentially are "prisons" because the offenders do not leave the premises. These “alternative secure” facilities include the following:

CONNECTIONS CORRECTIONS PROGRAM – Short-term drug and alcohol treatment centers for male offenders in Butte and Warm Springs.

ELKHORN TREATMENT CENTER – Nine-month methamphetamine treatment program for women, located in Boulder.

MISSOULA ASSESSMENT AND SANCTION CENTER (MASC) – Many offenders who are sentenced to DOC go to MASC, where they are assessed and provided treatment prior to being placed. Only about 20 percent of these offenders go to prison initially.

NEXUS – Nine-month methamphetamine treatment program for men, located in Lewistown.

START (Sanction, Treatment, Assessment, and Revocation Transition) – A “halfway back to prison” center in Anaconda for male offenders who have violated conditions of community placement including prerelease, parole, or probation. Programming helps offenders avoid prison by teaching them how to make better choices.

WATCH (Warm Springs Addictions Treatment and Change) – Six-month alcohol addiction treatment programs in Warm Springs and Glendive for male and female offenders convicted of their fourth and subsequent DUIs (driving under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs).

1. When can I see or talk to my family member?

“I will find out what the rules are and help you visit him.”

Visiting rules are different for each jail and state prison. Sheriff’s offices or tribal governments can provide jail-visiting rules. Visiting rules change so we are not including them in this manual. See the phone listings for these facilities on page 43.

2. When is my family member coming home?

Be careful not to give a child an exact date because prison release dates can change for many reasons, including parole (early release) or new criminal charges (extended stay). If you are reasonably certain when the sentence will end, try using a reference date that is important to the child.

“We believe (s)he might come home after two summers,” or “after three birthdays,” or “when you are 12 years old.”

3. Will my family member be safe?

“People who work at the prison are called correctional officers. They are much like police officers. They work hard to make sure that your family member and the other inmates are safe. You will be safe when you visit.”

NOTE: Prisons in Montana do not use the term “guard” anymore because it has negative connotations and is considered derogatory. Today’s correctional officers are trained professionals who do more than “guard” the inmates. Caregivers can compare them to police officers.

4. Where will my family member sleep?

“Your family member will sleep in a bed sort of like a camp cot in a small room with bars on the door, called a cell. (S)he will probably share a cell with at least one other person, sometimes called a cellie.”

5. What will (s)he wear?

“Most inmates wear identical uniforms that look like doctor or nurse “scrubs.” Others wear jeans and matching shirts. The prison provides socks and shoes.”

6. What will (s)he eat?

“The prison serves three meals a day on trays in a cafeteria similar to the ones at schools. Some inmates eat meals in their cells. Inmates also buy snacks from a prison shop called a canteen.”

7. How will my family member spend his/her time in prison?

“People read books, write letters, and go outside or to a gym for exercise. They attend classes that help them learn how to obey rules, be better parents, stop drinking alcohol or taking drugs, and be less angry. Most prisons have classes for inmates who want to earn their high school degree or study for college.”

8. What will it be like to visit prison?

Every prison is different. You will be informed about the rules in advance. This is a general answer to help children envision the visit and perhaps lessen their fear:

“You will be with me (or other adult caregiver) the entire time. Before we go, the prison will tell us what we can wear and what we can and cannot bring into the prison. Going into the prison will be sort of like going through airport security (if the child has been to an airport). We will be checked to be sure we don’t have cell phones or other things that are not allowed in prison. We will visit in a special room with tables and chairs. Most prison visiting rooms have books and toys for children to enjoy. Your family member will meet us there.”

9. Will anyone hurt us?

Public safety is the top priority at DOC correctional facilities. Staff will take any action necessary to protect visitors, other staff, and inmates. Visits include some risks, which staff members will explain to visitors. Young children probably do not need to be told that a prison visit involves risk. However, it might be a good idea to explain that a stranger (security staff) will be touching them during the search.

“The people who work at the prison will keep us safe. You will not be left alone at any time in the prison. It might be scary at first to be in a prison but no one will hurt us.”

10. What if I do something wrong? Will I have to go to prison?

“If you do something wrong you will have a consequence like “time out” or not riding your bike for three days.”

A few words about prison transfers...

The DOC frequently transfers male inmates from one prison to another on short notice. An inmate at Montana State Prison (MSP) in Deer Lodge might be transferred to one of three regional prisons, which are located in Great Falls, Shelby and Glendive. Inmates at those prisons might be transferred to MSP.

Transfers occur for many reasons. This is called inmate population management. Perhaps MSP is full but the prison in Glendive has a few empty cells, for example. The inmate may have disciplinary problems and needs a higher custody level or separation from another inmate. Maybe the transfer is necessary to meet the inmate’s treatment, programming or medical requirements.

The DOC considers inmate family needs when it makes prison transfer decisions, but managing the inmate population and assuring public safety come first.

A prison transfer can create an immediate crisis if the family does not have the resources to pick up and move to another town, or even to visit the loved one who is now hundreds of miles away. Children will have the same questions all over again about this new prison, plus a few others:

11. We were supposed to visit Monday. Now when can we visit him?

“He has been moved to another prison. Let’s look at a map and I can show you where he is. We will have to wait to visit after Christmas but we can draw some pictures and send them.”

“We can take the bus (or train) to visit him in the summer. It might be fun to take the train.”

“We don’t have the money to buy gas to drive there and stay in a motel right now. We will have more money later. We can visit him for your birthday.”

12. Why did they take him away?

“Sometimes they move inmates to another prison to make more room for others.”

We might not know the reasons so we will have to do the best we can. Shall we write him a letter?”

“Your loved ones made some mistakes so now he must spend some time in a different prison with more rules to learn how to behave better.”

13. I don’t want to move again. I like my day care mom (or school) and I will miss my friends.

“I am sorry this is happening to you. It is not fair. But you might really like the new town and making new friends.”

“Grandma lives closer to this other prison so now we can see her every week.”

“We will live near a big river and you can go fishing.”

10 QUESTIONS A CHILD MIGHT ASK WHEN A FAMILY MEMBER GOES TO A PRERELEASE CENTER

INTRODUCTION

Private agencies in Montana contract with the Department of Corrections (DOC) to operate prerelease centers in Billings, Bozeman, Butte, Great Falls, Helena, and Missoula. They provide housing, treatment and counseling for people convicted of felony crimes. Sometimes people call prerelease “halfway houses” because they offer a level of supervision less restrictive than prison. Most offenders stay in prerelease centers for six months.

Prerelease residents must work in the community or spend much of their time applying for jobs. The doors are not locked like a prison but the residents must have staff approval to leave. They may leave the prerelease center for work, church, treatment, classes, or shopping for basic needs.

They must return on time or they can be sent to prison.

Many prerelease residents spent time in prison. Perhaps the parole board agreed to release them onto parole if they successfully complete a six-month stay at a prerelease center. Others were sentenced to the Department of Corrections (DOC), which determined that a prerelease center is the most appropriate placement.

Local screening committees decide if an offender will be accepted into a particular prerelease center. One community might accept an offender after others said no. Screening committees usually include a prerelease staff member, law enforcement, a probation and parole officer, and citizens. Many offenders apply for a prerelease placement in their own community, so they can be close to family and friends.

1. What is a prerelease center?

“Prerelease centers are places where people who broke the law stay while they learn how to obey the rules. Some prerelease centers have a lobby with chairs, books and a TV. The people who are in charge can see what is going on from an office with lots of windows. Most prerelease centers have classes where people can learn how to stop drinking or using drugs, control their anger, and follow the law.”

2. Is my family member behind bars?

“Prerelease centers do not have bars on the windows or high fences like jails or prisons. The people at the prerelease will tell him/her what time (s)he can leave the center and what time to come back every night.”

3. Why did my family go to a prerelease center?

If the court recommends prerelease instead of prison:

“The judge decided to give your family member a chance to prove that (s)he could obey the law and stay in our community instead of going to prison. (S)he will have to find a job and obey the rules. If your family member breaks the law again, the judge might send him or her to prison.”

If the family member went to prison and then prerelease:

“Your family member spent time in prison. Now it is time to show that (s)he can find a job, obey the law, and live in the community again. If your family member succeeds in the prerelease center, (s)he will be coming home in about six months.”

4. When can I see or talk to my family member?

“Prerelease centers will allow you to visit at certain times when your family member is not at work or in school. We will find out the rules, and I will go with you. People in the prerelease centers can use the telephone and write letters.”

5. When is my family member coming home?

“Your family member will probably stay in the prerelease center for six months (until July, until after Christmas, after your birthday, etc.) Sometimes they stay longer if they have classes to finish or if they have not obeyed the rules.”

6. Where will (s)he sleep?

“People in prerelease centers have a bed and dresser. They usually share a small room with one other person. They have sheets, blankets, and pillows like yours.”

7. What will (s)he wear?

“People in prerelease centers wear their own clothes. They are allowed to have socks and underwear, work clothes, pajamas, a coat, and boots/shoes.”

8. What will (s)he eat?

People who live at the prerelease center eat three meals in a big room that looks like a school cafeteria. Some prerelease centers serve food cooked somewhere else and brought in every day. Other prerelease centers have cooks. Your family member and others who live there might help in the kitchen.”

9. What will my family member do in the prerelease center?

“Prerelease centers have classes to help your family members and the other residents learn how to be less angry, stop using drugs or alcohol, become better parents, manage their money and follow the laws.”

10. Why can't my family member have his/her cell phone to call me?

“One of the consequences of committing a crime is that your family member is not allowed to have a cell phone. This is one of many rules (s)he has to follow. (S)he can use the phone at the prerelease center but (s)he has to wait his/her turn.”

10 QUESTIONS A CHILD MIGHT ASK WHEN A FAMILY MEMBER IS ON PROBATION OR PAROLE

INTRODUCTION

It is not necessary for children to learn the difference between parole and probation. The same people supervise probationers and parolees in Montana, and the rules are similar.

Parole is early release from prison granted by the Board of Pardons and Parole (“parole board”) to offenders who have demonstrated that they do not pose a risk to victims or the public. They must have met court-ordered treatment and programming conditions outlined on the sentencing judgment, and shown evidence of positive change. Think of parole as prison time served in the community.

Probation is community supervision instead of prison. A probationer can avoid prison for the entire sentence as long as (s)he follows the probationary rules. Think of probation as prison time “suspended” over the family member to ensure compliance with the law.

Many sentences include a combination of prison and probation and/or parole. If your family member receives a 20-year sentence with 8 years suspended, (s)he might spend 12 years in prison and 8 more on probation. However, (s)he could be granted parole after serving as little as one fourth of the prison sentence, or 5 years. In this case, your family member would serve 7 years (the balance of the prison sentence) on parole and 8 years on probation.

If a family member needs enhanced supervision on probation, the judge or Department of Corrections (DOC) may order the Intensive Supervision Program (ISP). A probationer on ISP is confined to a certain geographic area and must wear an electronic ankle monitor to show where (s)he is.

All parolees and probationers in Montana (including those on ISP) report to Probation and Parole (P&P) Officers employed by the DOC. Supervision rules are similar. Probationers and parolees must refrain from alcohol and illegal drugs, and stay out of bars and casinos. They cannot contact their victims or travel outside designated areas without a permit. The judge typically orders probationers and parolees to hold jobs, pay fines and fees including victim restitution, and participate in various types of treatment and programming.

1. How will my family member act when (s)he gets out of prison?

“Your family member is used to living in a small cell and obeying many rules, eating what they give him/her to eat, and wearing prison clothes. It will take awhile for him/her to adjust to being home. We will all have to get used to being a family again. People will help you with this.”

2. What will happen to my family member on probation/parole?

Parole or probation after spending some time in prison:

“Because your family member committed a crime and had to be in prison, now (s)he must prove to people that (s)he can follow the rules. (S)he will meet (daily, weekly or monthly) with a probation and parole (P&P) officer to make sure he is following the rules.”

Sentenced to probation with no prison:

The judge decided that your family member can come home instead of going to prison. (S)he will have special rules to follow, including a meeting every week/month with a probation and parole (P&P) officer who enforces the rules.”

3. What does a P&P officer look like?

“P&P officers look just like other people. They can be men or women. They are like police officers except they don’t wear uniforms. They have badges and sometimes they carry guns. A P&P officer might come to your home to make sure your family member is following the rules. If you are afraid or don’t feel safe, you can tell the P&P officer and (s)he will help you.”

4. Will the same P&P officer always come to our house?

“The officer might change sometimes.”

A child will probably experience many disappointments when a loved one is bound by travel, time, and activity restrictions. You might try focusing on the positive aspects of community supervision instead of prison.

5. Why can't my family member come to my ball game, go shopping with me, or take us to Grandma's for Thanksgiving?

"Your family member is lucky to be at home instead of in prison, but (s)he has many rules to follow. One of the rules is that (s)he cannot leave town (or the county) without special permission. I'll go to your ball game/ shopping with you. Maybe Grandma can come here for Thanksgiving."

6. Why can't we have a hamburger at (the local restaurant and bar)?

"We talked about how your family member gets in trouble when (s)he drinks alcohol (or gambles). One of the rules says that (s)he cannot go places where (s)he might be tempted to drink or play the machines. Our old restaurant has a casino. Let's make hamburgers at home/get the hamburgers to go/ try another restaurant that doesn't serve alcohol."

7. How long does probation or parole last?

"The judge decided that your family member will be on probation for 10 years. That means you will be in high school."

"Your family member will be finished with parole when you are 13 years old."

8. What will happen if my family member breaks one of the rules?

“The P&P officer would have to decide what to do. Sometimes a family member can have another chance but he has to agree not to get in any more trouble. If (s)he breaks the rules again, a judge might have to decide whether to send your family member to prison.”

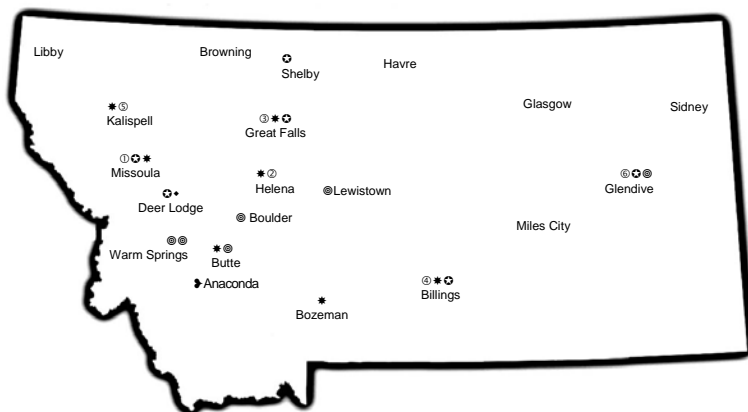

9. My family member drank some beer and they took him or her back to jail. What will happen?

“We don’t know yet. Sometimes people on probation (or parole) go to a special program for a few months to learn how to stop drinking alcohol. Your family member knows the rules and (s)he made a bad choice. (S)he will have consequences.”

10. Why doesn’t my family member have enough money to buy me a new bike for my birthday?

“The judge told your family member that (s)he must pay for the damage (s)he caused when he ran into the other people’s car. One of the people was hurt in the wreck and because it was your family member’s fault, (s)he will be paying the bills for the doctor and for fixing the car. These bills are some of the consequences.”

Our mission is to provide support and advocacy for families touched by incarceration in Montana. Our goal is to empower each individual -- the child, the caregiver, and the incarcerated parent or other family member.

MAFTI has a limited number of free copies of this manual to distribute. If you know a caregiver or other individual who needs a copy, or if you have extra copies to share, please call MAFTI at (406) 728-5437.

This manual was printed at Montana Correctional Enterprises (MCE), the industries program at Montana State Prison in Deer Lodge. MCE offers diverse opportunities for inmates to learn job skills necessary for success when they are released back to their families and communities.

Printing funds were donated by prison inmates via inmate welfare accounts at Montana State Prison, Montana Women's Prison, Crossroads Correctional Center, Dawson County Correctional Facility, and Great Falls Regional Prison.
